

I have been on the Indiana No call list for quite some time and have found it to be very satisfactory. At this time it appears that the FCC's proposal diminishes a law that is strong in Indiana. I urge you to not dilute the strongest no call law in the United States.

I find this law important as I am a single working female. The law gives me a sense of protection where I know telemarketers (or people posing as telemarketers) would be calling my house. Since I have been on the list in Indiana, I've not received ANY telemarketing calls, comparing to at least 10-12 calls a week.

Again, I urge you to make yourself aware of Indiana's no call law as a high standard that should be used across all states.

Thank you.
